What Goes Around Comes Around

One day a young teacher was driving alone, wondering how he was going to afford supplies for his classroom when he saw an elderly lady, stranded on the side of the road with a flat tire.

He pulled his sputtering old truck in front of her sedan and suggested: "Why don't you wait in the car where it's warm while I change this tire for you? By the way, my name is Bryan Anderson."

Bryan's shirt was smudged with grease and his knuckles were scraped by the time he changed her flat tire, but he refused to take any payment from the lady. He asked instead that she give assistance to the next person who looked like they might need it. After waiting to make sure she drove off safely, Bryan left as well.

The lady turned off at a small coffee shop a few miles down the road to take the chill off before she made the last leg of her trip home. There, she noticed the waitress with a sweet smile was pregnant. She paid for her coffee with a hundred dollar bill and while the waitress went to get change, the lady slipped out the door, but wrote a note on the napkin: "No change necessary, just do something for another person who needs it." Under the napkin were four more $100 bills.

That night when the waitress got home from work, her husband was already sleeping so she tucked the cash into his work bag with a note "For school supplies". She climbed into bed and whispered: "I love you, Bryan" before falling asleep.*

Innovative Masks

Ashley Lawrence, 21, is studying education for the deaf and hard of hearing, and knows the importance of face visibility for those who rely on lip reading or American Sign Language to communicate.

With that in mind, she's creating reusable fabric masks that feature a clear plastic piece over the wearer's mouth so that their lips are still visible.

“[These are] for anyone who uses speech reading, lip reading, anybody like that, and people who are profoundly deaf who use ASL as their primary mode of communication,” she told NBC. “ASL is very big on facial expressions and it is part of the grammar I felt like there was a huge population that was being looked over. We’re all panicking right now and so a lot of people are just not being thought of,” Lawrence said. “So, I felt like it was very important that, even at a time like this, people need to have that communication.”

The Eastern Kentucky University student and her mother have been working together on the project, making their first two or three sets at home out of bed sheets and plastic fabric. Lawrence said she's also working on a YouTube tutorial so that anyone who wants to can make masks of their own.

Mike's Luck

A secret agent was sent to a small town in Ireland to pick up sensitive information from an agent named Mike. His instructions were to walk around the town using a code phrase until he met his fellow agent. He found himself on a desolate country road and finally ran into a farmer.

“Hello,” said the agent. “I’m looking for a man called Mike.”

“Well you’re in luck,” said the farmer. “The butcher is called Mike, the baker is named Mike, and in fact, my name is Mike.”

“A-ha,” thought the agent, “maybe this is my man.” So he whispered the secret code:

“The sun is shining, the grass is growing, and the cows are ready for milking.”

“Oh,” said the farmer, “you’re looking for Mike the spy. He lives next door.” *

“The Day The World Stood Still”

An act of terrorism a foreign man’s will.
What he did, the day the world stood still.
No act of evil could ever compare
As we heard the news terrorism was here.
The planes had crashed so many lives lost!
Their souls not forgotten no matter the cost.
Strangers came together and friendships were bound.
Assuring families that their loved ones will be found
As days went by it just got worse
But hearts of strangers was our only source
Believing in faith and through God’s will
We all came together the day the world stood still!

Old Animal is New News

Scientists have discovered the world’s oldest land animal, according to the Mashable website. It resembled a millipede, and its scientific name is Kampecaris Obanensis—and it lived some 425 million years ago.

Its segmented body was about an inch long. Despite its appearance, scientists don’t consider it a millipede but a member of an extinct species. It probably lived in a lakeside environment and subsisted on decomposing plants during the Silurian period, when sea levels were much higher. A fossil of the Kampecaris was found near fossils of the world’s oldest known stemmed plant, the Cooksonia.

Although scientists say this is the world’s oldest land animal, other paleontologists believe that it may be predated by soil worms, some of which evolved some 25 million years earlier. Life started forming in the Earth’s oceans some 540 million years ago, with plants such as mosses emerging onto land some 450 million years ago. The development of plants like the Cooksonia helped support the development of land animals. The first land vertebrates—amphibians—appeared around 375 million years ago. *

It's Never Too Late

In the 1940s, there was a man who, at the age of 65, was living off of $99 social security checks in a small house, driving a beat-up car.

He decided it was time to make a change, so he thought about what he had to offer that other people may benefit from. His mind went to his fried chicken recipe, which his friends and family loved.

He left his home state of Kentucky and traveled throughout the country, trying to sell his recipe to restaurants. He even offered the recipe for free, asking for only a small chunk of the money that was earned.

However, most of the restaurants declined his offer. In fact, 1,009 restaurants said no. But even after all of the rejections, he persisted. Believing in himself and his chicken recipe. When he visited restaurant #1,010, he got a YES.

His name? Colonel Hartland Sanders and the franchise he built is called, “Kentucky Fried Chicken”.

Do you know his trade mark phrase? “Its Finger Licking Good”.

The Original Pour Over

It was 1908 when a German housewife , Melitta Bentz, made coffee history.

Tired of the bitterness and troublesome grounds in her daily brew, Melitta poked holes in the bottom of a brass cup and lined it with a sheet of her son's blotting paper. She then filled the cup with ground coffee and poured in hot water, thereby creating the pour-over filtration system. The Result... rich flavorful coffee with out the bitterness or mess.

Once perfected, Melitta decided to open up her own business. She was granted a patent on June 20, 1908 and on December 15th opened up "M. Bentz" and it quickly grew.

The innovation changed the way people worldwide make their coffee, becoming the precursor to modern day drip coffee brewing. Over 100 years later, Melitta remains dedicated to the pursuit of the perfect cup of coffee.

The Taxi Driver

Three drunk guys entered a taxi.

The Taxi driver knew that they were drunk so he started the engine and turned it off again.

He told them ... “ We have reached your destination.”

The first guy gave him money and left.

The second guy said “Thank You”.

The third guy gave the driver a slap. The driver was shocked.

Thinking the third drunk guy knew what he did he asked, “What was that for?”

The third guy replied , “Control your speed next time, you nearly killed us!”
